Seems spammers have figured out how to drop their wares on the byteplant forum.

Often one message with dozen's of url's in the message. Is it possible to scan or restrict the messages to one or two url's only in a message?

This problem's spreading the web.
Formulars are used for sending SPAM.
One Solution:
Build in some captcha
Make a Image-Drop Box with some "Signs and Letters", one has to give in to post a topic.

in a few forums I manage, I made another field in the register form that asks "What is 2 plus 2?" (and upon submit, does a quick script to check the answer of this before submitting the registration)..... this has filtered out every single spambot, as the text-in-a-image authentication didnt work, they somehow managed to read the code or something.
